

Student Accommodation

There has never been an easiest way to find the student accommodation of your choice and need.

With the private student accommodation sector offering a huge variety of properties of all kinds and prices, and with many universities having modern student halls, you are more than likely to be spoilt for choice, quality and opportunity in most universities locations.

If you are or you'll be a student, here are three main Student Accommodation options:

University Halls - Usually on campus accommodation, owned by the relevant university. (Generally, exclusively for a certain year of study).

Private Halls - Private version of university halls, located close to the campus, providing a huge range of room choices and the option to live with students from different universities or different year of study if you want to.

Private Rented Accommodation – Operated by private landlords or letting agents. These properties are normally well located within the local communities or student districts. Usually, this is the choice of 2nd & 3rd year students, after they decided to join together as a group and take the whole house, or be more individual and rent a room in a shared accommodation along other students they may not already know. This kind of accommodation will be more of a homely style, providing much more of an independent living experience.

This isn't an easy choice to make, so make sure you get advice from as many sources as possible. Family and friends who have been to university before are a good starting point. We can also help you gather more insight into the private rented accommodation and making the whole process of moving a lot easier or you.

Here you will find an overview of every type of accommodation and what to take into consideration when taking the decision. (the word here should be a link to the other blog called: " Student Accommodation options - Overview"
